

A great band is also ## a great team.

Not only do you need to fill your performance role, but what else can you help with? What other skills can you bring to the table to help move the band forward? Web design? Social media work? Booking? Promotion? Don't wait for someone to ask you. Always be willing to step up and say,

"What else can I help with??!!"

Are you in a band?...
Have you ever given this a thought?

Some bands, as an example, never give a thought about the other things that must be done to make a gig successful. The musicians show up (rarely early), pack their gear in, set it up and stand in front of the crowd they are about to play for and fool around tuning up or worse yet a thing called "noodling"... completely unprofessional and really not appreciated by either the crowd or the management.

I get a few pieces e-mailed to me from "side men" in bands and even by bartenders and waiters... they love to see the evening go well... better tips! Got a couple of players that care about having an audience and send me info on their upcoming gigs.

Whether you're in a band or an ardent follower... give the above a thought! My deadline is the Saturday of the week before... do a band a favor!
