

"No musician ever really retires, because you can't retire from who you are."

That is kinda right... And also kinda wrong!

I guess it is "kinda right" because you see guys stop playing for a while when they get to be a certain age but believe me... it's tough to completely pack it in.

I've got an idea in my head of a group I'd like to start up... I even have a name for this group and the style of music "we are going to play"... I'm watching for guys and I already have a gig when the time comes.

If you have run into me over the past couple of months, you know I've got the "old Santa beard" growing again and am getting ready for that... I've done Santa for about the last 15 or 16 years... you can bet that is "show business!"

Also you see the "biggies" doing "farewell shows" for years... usually until they just can't physically (or mentally) can't do it anymore... sad day I can tell you.

Then of course some of the great ones decide they would take their final bow a bit early... I'm thinking of course about Jay Shuffle, Jimmy Barto and Paul Brier... all guys from my little "Great American Songbook" band.

See ya next week... Francis.

Always Have Fun!!

Expect a mix of instrumental & vocal music, with different flavors inspired by David Grisman's "Dawg music", vintage swing, fiddle tunes, beautiful waltzes, some classic rock, and traditional bluegrass with vocal harmonies -- and plenty of lively, hot pickin'!
