Can you imagine... Lakeside without music?

I love the jams that take place on some Sundays at La Bodega Restaurant and Bar... a great core band of super talented players who do amazing things to keep the crowd happy... and are they ever good at it!

The place is packed and everybody is having a great time not knowing what or who they are going to hear next... which is the same with the core guys!

A jam session is not an "open mic" or karaoke... it is a place and time for performers to get together to enjoy each other as it isn't always possible for the "working players" to just let it all hang out with guys and gals from other venues.

at the Huerto Cafe: Hidalgo 212 in Riberas del Pilar

Expert mandolinist Jan Reimers and multi-instrumentalist Jeffree White share a love of bluegrass; but also much more music than that! They present a variety of instrumental & vocal music, inspired by David Grisman’s “Dawg music”, vintage swing, fiddle tunes, exotic waltzes, Latin rhythms, some classic rock, and traditional bluegrass with vocal harmonies -- and plenty of lively, hot pickin’! You can find several videos in a playlist on YouTube (search band name or our names).

By Alan Ferguson. The play opening this weekend at Lakeside Little Theatre is a dire warning about the dangers of modern technology. It is a compelling, sometimes alarming story. And it is beautifully told in a polished and professional production, flawlessly executed. It raises the bar for amateur dramatics in our community to new heights. I urge you, if you have not already done so, to reserve a seat. It is the hottest ticket in town. The premise of Jordan Harrison's futuristic play, Marjorie Prime, supposedly set 40 years from now, is that artificial intelligence has evolved to the point it can create avatars of the dead to sit and chat with grieving partners, offering sympathy and consolation. But the avatars — which in the play take the form of holographic images called Primes — remember only what they have been programmed to learn, opening the door to manipulation.

As the play opens, Marjorie, once a vivacious and accomplished musician, is a disheveled shadow of her former self, in the grip of advancing dementia. She is increasingly obsessed with the computer-generated image of her late husband Walter, with whom she gossips daily about trivial memories of their past life. What they don't mention is the one event that has scarred both Marjorie's life and that of her daughter, Tess: the tragic death of her 13-year-old son, Damian. Marjorie has carefully stored Damian's things in a cupboard behind the Christmas decorations — but she hasn't spoken his name in 20 years.

It's a situation that irritates and frustrates her primary caregiver, Tess, who has been emotionally frozen out of her mother's life since Damian's death, and is annoyed and jealous of her mother's seeming ability to use "Walter Prime" to erase her brother's fate from her mother's memory.

Tess' search for answers is driving her to a despair that is exquisitely captured in this crucial role by the talented actress M.A. Bruneau who knocks it out of the park. Under the inspired direction of Bernadette Jones, the fraught and complex relationship between mother and daughter is conveyed with all its passion and pain.

Meanwhile, Marcy Weiland as Marjorie creates a compelling portrait of a vulnerable and fragile woman, stubbornly clinging to a sanitized version of her history. As her conversations range from flashes of insightful lucidity, to the confused ramblings of dementia, we are uncomfortably reminded of the terrible ravages of the disease.

In sharp contrast to troubled Tess, her husband, Jon, takes a pragmatic and sympathetic approach to Marjorie's fixation with the hologram. If it makes her happy, in his view, then why not? Mark Nichols is perfectly cast as the caring, thoughtful partner, struggling to make sense of his wife's growing instability.

Walter Prime, the hologram man, is played to perfection by Ken Yakiwchuk. His staccato delivery of dialogue you might expect from a chatbot is accompanied by a fixed half-smile and a robotic charm that seems persuasively half-human. It's a vital performance that is a

This is a play with strong guts. It takes us by the neck through the minefield of emotions that surround memory and grief. The suggestion that technology may someday evolve to the point it becomes a substitute for human empathy is both scary and unsettling.

And yet, in this play it is only when the characters cast off their mortal coil and themselves become "Primes" that they can calm the demons that plagued their human existence.

Is that the future that awaits us? The recent rapid advances in AI bring to our own doorsteps the potential of machines to take on the role of companions and fellow-conspirators in re-inventing our memories and even our identities. It's not often a play so entertaining gives us so much to reflect upon. This one certainly does.

A word is due here to those folk behind the scenes who make things work so smoothly. The spare, minimalist stage design by Alan Marsh is a perfect conception, down to the side-stage "pods" where the Primes sit immobile but eerily visible when not part of the action. The lighting design by Ricardo Perez complements the ambience and make-up artist Pamela Johnson works wonders transforming humans into "Primes". Others, too numerous to mention, contribute to a most memorable night out.
